

Auriel Robinson The Seatrails story

For many years I wondered would I ever settle in Ireland. I had travelled abroad a fair bit already and had itchy feet. Yet I loved Ireland and was proud of my country. Being a maritime archaeologist means seeking answers about the lives, beliefs and traditions of past cultures and civilisations. I remember the first day I set foot in Sligo. I drove through Castle Street thinking 'there's an old feel to this city' and I liked it. It had character and once I travelled up the Sligo coast in search of waves, I realised everything that appealed to me was pretty much here-the wild Atlantic, an awe-inspiring land and seascape, ancient and fascinating archaeology and history, the arts and a great warmth in the Sligo people. Setting up Seatrails is my way of sharing Sligo's antiquity and its natural gems through guided walking tours. Trails can be found at seatrails.ie and on Twitter @seatrails1

S X N W

Sligo X North West

Irish Independent

Wednesday 26 November 2014

www.independent.ie

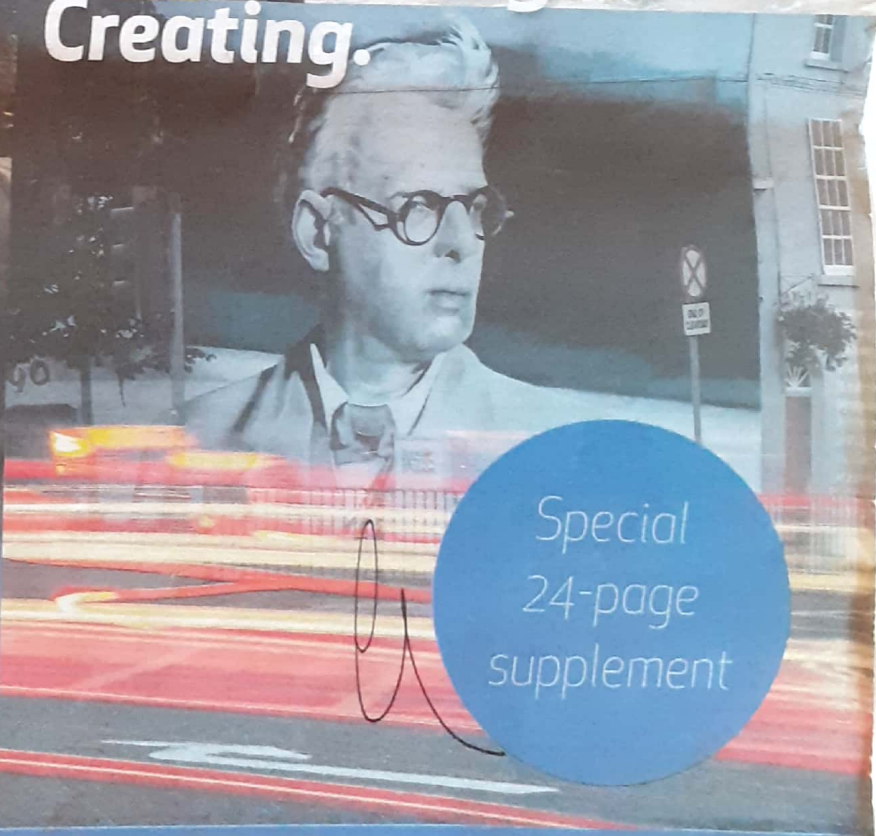

Living.

Creating.

Visiting.

Learning.

Special 24-page supplement

Is this the coolest town in Ireland?
Inside: The stories of the people who are reinventing Sligo.